#11 What is your vision of the future, a thousand years from today? All predictions of the future are wrong; that is an immutable law of science-fiction. The world, society, technology, are far too complex and unknowable. In the end we can only wonder at what might have been, and marvel at how closely one writer or another came to the truth of the future. In this book two masters of early science-fiction show us their view of the distant future. There are lessons to be taken from their 19th Century look at the 29th Century. The stories are as much a tale of how the world has changed in the last 100-150 years as it is a look at 850-900 years from today. In many ways we have exceeded their technological expectations; in others, we have quite a distance to go.
