

Nick of the Woods

At the period when Nick of the Woods was written, the genius of Chateaubriand and of Cooper had thrown a poetical illusion over the Indian character; and the red men were presented almost stereotyped in the popular mind as the embodiments of grand and tender sentiment a new style of the beau-ideal brave, gentle, loving, refined, honourable, romantic personages natures nobles, the chivalry of the forest. It may be submitted that such are not the lineaments of the race that they never were the lineaments of any race existing in an uncivilised state indeed, could not be and that such conceptions as Atala and Uncas are beautiful unrealities and fictions merely, as imaginary and contrary to nature as the shepherd swains of the old pastoral school of rhyme and romance; at all events, that one does not find beings of this class, or any thing in the slightest degree resembling them, among the tribes now known to travellers and legislators. The Indian is doubtless a gentleman; but he is a gentleman who wears a very dirty shirt, and lives a very miserable life, having nothing to employ him or keep him alive except the pleasures of the chase and of the scalp-hunt which we dignify with the name of war.
